MILL EXTRAORDINARY.

Two New York Politicians Scientifically Bruise Themselves for $1000, near Red Bank—An Honorable Delegation Witness the Fight.

Yesterday afternoon, about 2 o'clock, a host of the "fancy," embracing a specimen of almost every disreputable character coming under that familiar term, made their way to a secluded room near Red Bank to witness a "mill" fight.

The New York parties arrived in the train due here at 1 o'clock, and proceeded at once to the place designated for the fight. There were about five hundred persons from New York—bruisers, pickpockets, thieves, etc.—and about the same number from this city.

The place selected was fitted for better scenes—a dell in the midst of a grove of pines. A twenty-four foot square ring was staked out, and all the prizes for the night were brought to the requisition. The combatants came into the ring about half-past 8 o'clock, arm-in-arm.

John Prevost, or Captain Rynder, Gladiator No. 1, is forty-six years of age, five feet eight inches in height, weighs 170 pounds, and is a well-known New York politician. His colors were blue.

Dennis Foley, Gladiator No. 2, is twenty-nine years of age, five feet nine and a quarter inches high, and weighs 154 pounds. His colors were red and white.

Some trouble was had in settling upon a referee; but this difficulty was finally overcome by the unanimous appointment of John Tierman, a person of politico-coppero sentiments, hailing from James Guthrie. About half-past 3 o'clock the mill commenced, and was continued in the following order:

First Round—The pugilists had scarcely touched the mark before they "went to work." A corker was shot from Foley with his left hand, and he was promptly laid out for a few minutes.

Second Round—Foley was again the victor, and cured of his injury, and Prevost also seemed to have his eyes opened. A neat contest of skill resulted, till at last Foley struck Prevost's horn, and a beautiful flow of blood resulted.

Third Round—Foley giving Prevost the crook, and Prevost giving Foley the crook, the pugilists rattling down his throat opened this round, but a sockdologer from Prevost, sent Foley again to grass.

Fourth Round—Foley came up puffing considerably from the exertions he had undergone in the previous round, but he evidently meant work, as he sent out a right hander which missed, and received a compliment on the right eye, which immediately raised a "mouse," and enclosed the eye in a cocoon of blood.

Fifth Round—Foley, nothing disconcerted, was prompt to meet that right hander which he received, and sent a compliment on the right eye, which immediately raised a "mouse," and enclosed the eye in a cocoon of blood.

Sixth Round—Foley seemed elated, and smiled as well as he could with the gashes and swellings in his face, and he was as quick as he faced his opponent. He delivered a terrific blow on Prevost's right eye, in which he blew him into his right hand. His blow laid open the flesh above Prevost's right eye, and it was only after the most extraordinary exertions of his seconds that Prevost was brought to his feet.

Seventh Round—He was scarcely able to stand in this round, and Foley appeared quite as groggy, his left eye closed, and his face a mass of lumps. A counter, a cross-buttock, and a fall ended the round.

Eighth Round—Prevost came up apparently as fresh as ever. Foley rushed in like a madman, and was rewarded by being imprisoned in chancery. He was fearfully beaten about the face, but only escaped a final punishment by dropping on his knees. Betting seventy to thirty on Prevost.

Ninth Round—Prevost appeared to feel his oats, and levelled Foley with a half-iron blow. Tenth Round—Foley sent a compliment to that made Prevost's hair almost stand on end. His nose appeared to be mashed flat under the application, and presently began to swell to the proportions of a pumpkin. He confined his attentions to Foley to the region of the chest, but finally went down by a back fall, Foley on top.

Eleventh Round—Both men appeared distressed, puffing like porpoises. There were blue lumps on Foley's chest, and one of his eyes was closed. There was a heavy blow on the forehead, the livid lump that marked where his eye ought to be. Prevost's lips were swelled to the proportions of those of a Congo negro, his nose was the size of a summer radish, and his right arm was considerably swelled by the blows he received in a skilful parrying, and he was unable to dance around the ring, ducking and prancing like two turkeys on a hot stove plate. Feints for a point were tried two or three times, and were all failures, until Prevost put in a slapping right hander on Foley's jaw, which that functionary returned with interest on the gigantic proboscis of Prevost. Betting even.

Twelfth Round—Lively fibbing in this round, both men giving and taking. Foley down. Thirteenth Round—Foley took a blow of his feet with a terrific upper cut, which would be powerful enough to smash all the lower maxillary.

Fourteenth Round—Foley slow to time; Prevost puffing. Both men sparred for a minute and then delivered simultaneously. Both down.

Fifteenth Round—The whisky of the bottle-holders now began to operate powerfully on both men, and they were as fresh as at the beginning of the fight. Both of them even tried to smile—though such a smile! Both fought wildly, exchanging light tips, and concluded by falling lovingly together to the sod.

Sixteenth Round—This was the fiercest round of the fight, and the most dramatic. It was turning point. It was given and taken for at least four minutes amid the cheers and encouraging cries of the roughs assembled around the "square ring." The iron fists thudded into the rage both on each other's faces, and the crowd following the blows came the close. Cries of "Foul!" were directed to the referee at a supposed attempt of Foley to gouge Prevost. But Prevost proved the better man, and by a dexterous crook threw Foley. He landed on his head, and was conducted to his corner in a demoralized state.

Seventeenth, Eighteenth, and Nineteenth Rounds—Prevost had the fight all his own way. Foley merely walked up to be knocked down. All the knock-down blows were body blows, and some of the iron received a sockdologer in the neck, which spun him round like a top. Before he could recover, Foley gave him another in the left ear, which sent him heels over head into his corner (the fight was near that), overturning the benches, reporters, camp stools, and whisky bottles.

Twentieth Round—Prevost came up confidently, as did Foley, to the wonder of those who had seen the fight. Prevost reached for him, and, in return, received a sockdologer in the neck, which spun him round like a top. Before he could recover, Foley gave him another in the left ear, which sent him heels over head into his corner (the fight was near that), overturning the benches, reporters, camp stools, and whisky bottles.

Twenty-first Round—"It's all right," muttered Prevost through his compressed lips as he left the knees of his second, and the pit that Foley received from the crowd, and he was conducted to his corner in a demoralized state.

Twenty-second Round—"It's all right," muttered Prevost through his compressed lips as he left the knees of his second, and the pit that Foley received from the crowd, and he was conducted to his corner in a demoralized state.

Twenty-third Round—"It's all right," muttered Prevost through his compressed lips as he left the knees of his second, and the pit that Foley received from the crowd, and he was conducted to his corner in a demoralized state.

Twenty-fourth Round—"It's all right," muttered Prevost through his compressed lips as he left the knees of his second, and the pit that Foley received from the crowd, and he was conducted to his corner in a demoralized state.

Twenty-fifth Round—"It's all right," muttered Prevost through his compressed lips as he left the knees of his second, and the pit that Foley received from the crowd, and he was conducted to his corner in a demoralized state.

the centre of the "square ring," the blood flowed down their backs and breasts, giving them nothing if not a ghastly appearance. A reminder from Foley on Prevost's left eye bathed him with more crimson. A second stroke from Foley got him into chancery. He was fearfully wounded. He escaped by dropping on his knee. From this round to the eighty-sixth the hammering was but a rehashing of bruised and lacerated faces. As it was, the whole fight was a question of endurance, for the blows merely swished in the bloody flesh; no more disfiguring could be done. At the eighty-sixth round both were blind, and groped for each other, wasting feeble blows upon the air. At the call for the eighty-seventh round, Prevost was in his corner. The sponge was thrown up, and thirty-eight minutes. A large amount of money changed hands, Rynder's friends winning heavily. No officers of the law made their appearance, and at the end of the fight the crowd made its peaceful way back to the city. The men luckily left on the evening train—the most of them. Both pugilists are now doing well.

THE TRANSFER OF LEAGUE ISLAND TO THE UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT.

The Mayor yesterday signed the ordinance providing that application should be made by petition to the Court of Common Pleas of the county of Philadelphia, on behalf of the city of Philadelphia, as purchaser of certain lands for the purpose of presenting the same to the United States of America for national uses, for the appointment of seven discreet and disinterested resident freeholders of the city, to estimate and determine the fair value of all and singular the lands and parcels of land embraced within the area of the tract to be donated for naval purposes.

The City Councils by resolution approved the 23d of July 1867, entitled "A resolution authorizing negotiations for the purchase of certain land fronting on the League Island Back Channel," authorized the Mayor, with the Joint Special Committee on League Island, to enter into negotiations for the purchase, by private agreement, with the owner or owners thereof, of so much of the land situated on the northerly shore of the inland back channel separating League Island from the main land, as may be required by a naval station.

The Mayor, in pursuance of authority vested in him, endeavored to enter into negotiations by private agreement with the owners of the various parcels of land referred to, but not being successful, the present plan was adopted.
